With my time as dean recently concluded, I find myself reflecting on two very different experiences at The Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy. It will not surprise any of you that the classes I took, the friendships I made, and the Fletcher perspective I gained as a young naval officer and student brought me to know the world in a whole new way. And during these past five years as dean, it has been a great honor for me to watch 1,500 students graduate while the community’s hard work helped enrich The Fletcher School’s purpose and standing.

I am so proud of all we’ve accomplished together, particularly our progress on the strategic plan. Five years ago, the Fletcher community committed to improving our relevance, reputation, and resources in support of everything that has always set Fletcher students apart. Let’s acknowledge what we have achieved: innovative centers and programs, prominence in news analysis, and progress securing the school’s financial future.

The thought that I leave with you is the importance of ensuring that this community is always alive with the “right stuff.” We know that it requires administrative diligence, academic excellence, and philanthropic beneficence to attract, enroll, and educate the best students—whose success as Fletcher graduates has been, is, and will ever be The Fletcher School’s enduring strength. An important observation about our students: those who contribute the most to our community frequently overcome the highest hurdles to get here. Ultimately, Fletcher’s reputation and relevance hang on our ability to get the right people in the door. And, as always, that requires significant resources.

As you read this report, let’s celebrate our successes—and please join Laura and me in ensuring that The Fletcher School will always be without parallel in preparing the world’s leaders.

Thank you, one and all. Even more so than my time as a student, these past five years at Fletcher have been an incredible voyage.

James Stavridis, Ph.D.
Admiral, U.S. Navy (Retired)
Former Supreme Allied Commander of NATO, 2009–2013
Dean Emeritus, The Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy
at Tufts University
Susan Livingston, J79, F81, has had an international career. She is partner and global ambassador with the private bank Brown Brothers Harriman and serves in Massachusetts as honorary consul general for the tiny nation of Luxembourg. (“I get a diplomatic license plate,” she said, before adding with a laugh that the position sadly doesn’t include the wine cellar that comes with being ambassador to France.) And she credits Tufts and The Fletcher School with helping build the foundation for her success.

“Fletcher was for me a very important and formative experience,” Livingston said. “I made lifelong friends, and to this day I can remember certain professors.” Passionate about ensuring that future students can have similar experiences, she is a longtime mentor to students and a loyal and generous donor to the school’s annual fund, which supports financial aid, student services, faculty, and academics. Livingston also serves on The Fletcher School’s Board of Advisors and capital campaign committee.

Livingston made the most of her time at Fletcher and Tufts, which she felt fortunate to attend. She was a double major in political science and German, and also studied French and economics. She spent her junior year in the Tufts program in Tubingen, Germany, earning Phi Beta Kappa, and one semester of her senior year in Washington, D.C., before graduating summa cum laude. While earning her Fletcher degree, she studied for a year in Geneva, improving her French (and her skiing).

Although she initially planned on joining the Foreign Service—and even passed the exam—she decided to participate in a 14-month management training program with Manufacturers Hanover Trust in New York and realized that banking was “great fun.” In 1985, she accepted a position at the Boston office of Brown Brothers Harriman (BBH).

By November of her first year, Livingston was sent to Milan to help settle trades for BBH after a wave of international investment had stalled in an Italian bank. While other representatives of global financial services firms shouted in English at the Italian staff handling the gridlock, Livingston shared espresso and chocolates with them and was eventually invited into the bank’s back office. For two years, she lived in Milan for a week each month, working alongside the Italians “to get the job done” collaboratively. “Hard work beats talent every time,” Livingston told Fletcher graduates as 2016 Class Day speaker, “although it’s nice to have talent too.”

Livingston’s successful diplomacy in Italy helped boost BBH’s global custody business, and she was later named one of the first two female partners at her firm. Now, as global ambassador and client liaison, she manages C-suite relationships and serves on external boards, including chairing the political action group of the Investment Company Institute, a leading global industry association. Along the way, she lived in Luxembourg from 1992 to 1995, launching her long relationship with that nation.

Now living in Marblehead, Massachusetts, with her husband and teenage daughter, Livingston has served on the boards of the Museum of Fine Arts and the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution, among others. But she’s particularly loyal to The Fletcher School, which prepared her for her global career. “It was intellectually stimulating—an epic, fantastic time,” she said. Through her volunteering and extraordinary financial support, she is making that experience possible for the next generation.
The Admiral James and Laura Stavridis Scholarship Fund was created in 2015 by their friends and leadership donors Brad Meslin, Denis Bovin, Fred Chicos, and Governor Philip Murphy and First Lady Tammy Murphy. The scholarship is awarded to the most outstanding Master of Arts (M.A.) and Master of Arts in Law and Diplomacy (MALD) candidates each year. The fund’s goal is to ensure that the cost of graduate school will not impede an exceptional student’s ability to attend The Fletcher School. Throughout his five years at the helm of The Fletcher School at Tufts University, Dean Emeritus James Stavridis witnessed the value of scholarship and financial aid to graduate students. As acknowledgment and example, he and Laura have generously pledged an additional $1 million to augment the fund and to encourage others to make similar gifts.

THANK YOU FOR YOUR GENEROSITY.

All gifts to The Fletcher School count toward our $120 million goal as part of Brighter World: The Campaign for Tufts, a comprehensive fundraising campaign across all Tufts campuses. Fletcher’s achievement through fiscal year 2018 is 62 percent.

Fletcher’s priorities include:

• Expanding resources for financial aid
• Developing curricula to reflect evolving international issues
• Attracting and retaining a world-class faculty
• Broadening the learning experience
• Building a foundation of annual support to sustain the school into the future
